

DISNEYLAND IN ANAHEIM

Walt Disney designed Disneyland in a way which encourages visitors to flow through different lands in a particular order, with each land exploring a part of the United States that is indicative of American's rich history and culture. As a result, visitors could easily learn about America's past, present and future. More importantly, Disneyland is not only a theme park, but rather a symbolic place that encapsulates American idealism. Disneyland is located in a small, historical town named Anaheim as opposed to a much larger city such as Los Angeles. Anaheim's location contradicts the concept of a 'big America' that values money and material wealth over communities and families. The construction of Disneyland in Anaheim indicates that the 'real America' truly exists in small towns and communities across the nation. The 'idealism' rather than 'realism' that the park represents creates a national fervor among visitors.
