

G20 SUMMIT

Globalization has never been so desirable as the whole world is seeking a way of solving some unprecedented complex issues like terrorism, climate change and economic recession. This integration on an international level is receiving increasing attention right now. For example, the heads of the industrialized and developing economies have already formed a new type of forum named the G20 to address economic issues each year. This is not only an alliance between advanced and emerging nations, but also a crucial chance to find a way to unite the world on certain problems. When the most influential political leaders are gathering to discuss global issues, people are seeing the determination to confront our most challenging and complicated problems. It was these combined efforts that helped the world get through the financial tsunami of 2008. With more cooperation and less confrontation, it is reasonable for us to believe that globalization will only bring us more benefits.
